Business Tip of the Month
Make sure you present your brand image consistently. Your brand is not just your business name and logo. Use the same front, colors and tagline on everything from business cards and signage to ads and brochures.

It has long been known that organizations that embrace diversity and inclusion have a competitive advantage over those that don’t. In fact, Forbes recently reported that diverse, inclusive companies are 35 percent more likely to have financial returns above national industry medians. But while the business case for diversity and inclusion is clear, the roadmap for getting started often isn’t.

Buffalo Niagara’s premier event on diversity and inclusion is a day-long symposium designed to help CEOs, founders, owners, human resources professionals, and managers understand the building blocks of diversity and inclusion. Attendees will hear from best practice experts in diversity and inclusion and leave each session with real-world, actionable tips, information, and inspiration they can use to get started with diversity and inclusion initiatives at their organization.

Mary-Frances Winters is the founder and CEO of The Winters Group, Inc., a global organizational development and diversity and inclusion consulting firm. Over the past 34 years, Ms. Winters’ thought-provoking message and her approach have helped hundreds of organizations and thousands of individuals get started with diversity and inclusion initiatives. Through The Winters Group, Ms. Winters has worked with organizations like Disney, Pixar, LinkedIn, Twitter, Domino’s, SunTrust, Kaiser Permanente, and Ingersoll Rand, among others.
